1. Introduction

This document is a specification of the data format for the Bulk Images Export Index File supplied by the CRO to customers. Every day, images of submission documents received since the last extract are exported to a location for CRO customers to download. The images will now be exported in pdf format (previously they were available in multipage tiff format).

Each document either relates to a company or business name submission and is named using a unique number to identify it. For each batch of documents exported an index file is created to provide additional details in relation to the documents exported. The purpose of this document is to describe the contents of the index file.

2. Index File Specification

Each time the export program is run, an index file is generated to provide more details as to what each image relates to. Each Index file is given a unique name. Typically it will be named index<VolNo>.txt, where <VolNo> corresponds to a unique number to identify each run, eg index5000.txt, index5001.txt etc.

The fields for the index file are specified in the table below. Each field is delimited by a tilde ('~') symbol, while some fields also are preceded by their label before giving a value. The Index file is character set UTF-8.
